Biosafety and biosecurity issues in biomedical research. The extent to which the threat of bioterrorism may be a potential risk to laboratory workers conducting studies on human pathogens or agents of disease is unknown. This article outlines safety practices and procedures that have been implemented to minimize these risks. These procedures are designed to protect workers from the human and animal pathogens associated with bioterrorism and thus aid the public health and medical response to a biological attack. Such a public health response would include: Residents of downtown Portland will soon have a new way to cross busy Burnside Street and more direct, pedestrian-friendly routes to the city's most popular attractions. The Portland Bureau of Transportation plans to install a new bike and pedestrian bridge over Burnside Street that will connect the Lloyd Center mall with the Portland State University campus. The new bridge, which will be three-quarters of a mile long, will be named the Ron and Tom Selle Bridge in honor of two longtime Portland activists who helped push for the project. Tom Selle and Ron Selle have spent more than 30 years advocating for safety and pedestrian access to downtown. "When we started this, we said, 'Let's do it for the kids,'" Tom Selle said in an interview with The Oregonian/OregonLive. "This isn't just about our generation. This is about our kids and our grandkids." Tom Selle was a founding member of the Downtown Eastside Neighborhood Association and the first president of the Portland Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now, or known as the Oregon ACORN. He's also worked on environmental issues and was a longtime member of the Portland Planning Commission. His younger brother, Ron, was a leader in the city's movement for the Comprehensive Plan and worked to establish the Bicycle Advisory Committee. He's worked on numerous projects around the world, including as a leader of the Portland People's Transportation Plan and the Vancouver, British Columbia, People's Transportation Plan. In 2010, he was diagnosed with Alzheimer's and the past decade has been his brother's primary caretaker, Ron Selle said. Tom Selle and Ron Selle were the two most vocal residents lobbying to move the new Ron and Tom Selle Bridge from the Lloyd Center site and install it over Burnside Street. Tom Selle said the brothers pushed for the project because they wanted to see a safe 82157476af
